JUDGE ORDERS ALL DOORS LOCKED AS HE CHARGES JURY

Gives Strict Orders That No One is to Leave or Enter

TROOPERS ON GUARD

Hauptmann Says: "Your Guess is as Good as Mine"

By James L. Kilgallen
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Feb. 13.—Justice Thomas W. Trenchard began his charge to the jury today at the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, 37-year-old carpenter, charged with the murder of the Lindbergh baby.

The Justice's charge was delivered behind locked doors. Justice Trenchard instructed Sheriff John H. Curtis to allow no one to enter or leave the courtroom during the charge, this included newspaper reporters. No messengers were allowed to be sent out of the room.

The court room presented a strange contrast with the court in session and the wires in the place clicking only occasionally. On other days there has been a constant clatter of telegraph machines from the time court opened until it closed.

State Troopers in their bright blue uniforms maintained guard inside and outside the court room doors. No one was allowed to approach these doors. Corridors were cleared of spectators.

COURT ROOM, FLEMINGTON, N. J., Feb. 13.—"Your guess is as good as mine," said Bruno Richard Hauptmann today when asked if he had any guess as to the verdict to be rendered in this case.

"There has been so much guess work in this case already," he added. Hauptmann was outwardly confident; he did not appear to be nervous as his "zero hour" approached.

In making his charge, Justice Trenchard peered over his spectacles and talked to the jury in the manner of a man talking to his own friends in his living room. Before starting, he said: "The Sheriff will have the doors closed and let no one out until the jury has been instructed and retired."

MARRIAGE LICENSES FALL OFF FOR COUNTY

Nearly 25% Decrease Shown for First Month of Year

REASON IS UNKNOWN

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 13.—Bucks county's marriage license bureau in the office of the Clerk of Orphans' Court of Bucks county got away to a poor start in January, the official records show, for business fell off nearly 25 per cent. the first month of the year compared to January, 1934.

Deputy Clerk of Orphans' Court Jacob Shelly, of Fountainville, is at a loss to know why the sudden drop in marriage license applications for Bucks county occurred when Bucks county has been making one record after another, month after month, in 1934. In fact, the year 1934 brought an all-time marriage license record for Bucks county.

During January there were licenses sold to only 153 couples compared to 195 couples in January of 1934. Sixty-five per cent. of the applicants in January were non-residents of Bucks county. The official docket shows that the applicants came from ten states and that twelve of the male applicants and nine of the female applicants had been divorced.

Only twelve of the applicants were under 21 years of age in January while the average age of the male applicants was twenty-eight while the females averaged twenty-six years.

Trenton business in the marriage license bureau included sixty-nine individuals while sixty-four others were from Philadelphia. In Bucks county, Bristol furnished the largest number of applicants while Doylestown was second.

Although most of the January marriages were performed by either Justices of the Peace or a Burgess, the number of religious ceremonies in January increased over the same month in 1934.

Forty-eight per cent. of the female applicants told the marriage licenses clerk in January that they had occupations other than housework. The ages of the applicants grouped, are as follows:

	Men	Women
Under 21 years	5	7
21 to 25 years	67	85
25 to 30 years	40	42
30 to 40 years	23	19
40 to 50 years	10	11
50 to 60 years	7	1
Over 60 years	1	1

Honor Memory of Frances Willard at Union's Meeting

The Frances Willard Memorial Meeting of the W. C. T. U. was appropriately held last evening in the First Baptist Church, as it was in this edifice that Miss Willard on her visit to Bristol in 1889 addressed a large audience. At that time Miss Willard and Miss Gordon were entertained over the week-end at the home of Mrs. Samuel Swain, 507 Radcliffe street.

After reading the 91st Psalm, and prayer by Mrs. G. A. Coon, the group of children from the Baptist Branch of the L. T. L. entertained with singing; and those from the Bristol Presbyterian Church with several songs; also a sketch by two little girls, the Vetter sisters, who discussed at their tea party the question "Can you ask a blessing if you have cigarettes?" The children were served with ice cream.

After the business session the program included: Quotations from Miss Willard; story of her statue and verses from "How Calm She Stands," written by Catherine Lent Stevenson for presentation of the statue by the state of Illinois when 2000 school children marched past the marble form dropping flowers at her feet. The statue was presented by Governor Deneen of Illinois, and formally accepted by Senator Shelby M. Cullom.

Among the hundreds of tributes paid on that occasion by the press of the country was this of the Chicago Tribune: "She was the Christian conscience of the last part of the 19th century."

"Stand radiant soul.
Here in the center of our nation's heart:
Forever of its best life
Thou'rt a part.
Here thou shalt draw
Thy land to what thou art,
Stand radiant soul."

ITALY'S JOBLESS BUILD THE WORLD'S FINEST SYSTEM OF HIGH-SPEED ROADS

By H. R. Knickerbocker

(Copyright, 1935, I. N. S.)

ROME, Feb. 13.—(INS).—"Give us bigger and worse depressions" might be the prayer of the Italian motorist for today Italy is one of the few countries in the world which will come out of the depression with a definite profit in one important category of national wealth.

News of importance has been accumulating gradually in this country for six years. It has been generally overlooked because it grew so imperceptibly.

Today the news has grown up. Italy has in the last six years with the labor of otherwise jobless men leaped a gap of a hundred years. At one bound she has jumped from bottom of the class of European nations to the front rank in respect of roads.

She has given work to 100,000 men. She has given herself a permanent national asset. Her example has already inspired Germany and England to go and do likewise.

Example For Europe

Six years ago Mussolini announced his program of road-building to combat unemployment. Nobody paid much attention to it. Road-building was old as mankind. It was a bore.

Today to this Fascist country delegations come from democratic England and from Nazi Germany to study and admire the truly instructive results of Mussolini's six years of road-building.

Imagine a country the size of Italy which six years ago did not possess 300 miles of road good enough to permit motorists to drive at 50 miles an hour.

Today this country has over 6,000 miles of roads which permit a comfortable and sustained speed of more than 50 miles an hour. Today it has over 1,000 miles of speedways whereon motorists have driven at an average speed of nearly 70 miles an hour all the way from the northern border of Italy to Rome.

Her jobless did it for her. Before they went to work Italy had slipped back from the proud position held by the Roman Empire in ancient times as the nation with the best roads in the world to the booby place with almost the worst roads of any great country. The old Roman supremacy in roads was of course unchallenged.

BRISTOL MAN FINDS WEISS MURDER GUN

James Dugan in Water But Few Minutes Before Locating Weapon

CYLINDER WAS MISSING

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 13.—The old English custom of having the defendants appear before a grand jury while indictments were being asked was discontinued today by the Bucks County grand jury here in the Weiss murder case. District attorney Arthur M. Eastburn asked for the indictments, and the only witnesses were detectives and Bucks County coroner, Dr. John J. Sweeney. Judge Hiram H. Keller's charge to the jury was brief, and required but about 10 minutes.

Indictments for murder were asked against: Martin Farrell, Robert J. Eckart and Walter Wiley.

Webster Achey, Doylestown attorney, announced to the court that he represented Walter Wiley and Joseph Coffey, the latter whom the grand jury had been asked to indict as an accessory after the fact. Indictments were asked against Harry Seibel and Mrs. Beatrice Wilkinson, also charged with being accessories after the fact.

Eckart is also charged with aiding in the secretion of the kidnapped person.

The revolver, minus the chamber, which it is alleged killed William (Big Nose) Weiss, Philadelphia kidnapper, was found yesterday afternoon in Poquessing Creek, Torresdale. The revolver was found by James Dugan, 21, 635 New Buckley street. Dugan and Paul Singer, Buckley street, were taken to the scene yesterday afternoon by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo to search for the gun. Dugan had been in the water but a few minutes when he reached his arm down into the icy stream and called to Russo "here it is."

The revolver was found about 10 yards from the west side of the bridge which carries Bristol Pike over the stream at Torresdale. The gun was lying in about the middle of the stream. Police officers from Philadelphia continued the search, going carefully over the stream with rakes, combing every bit of the ground. The revolver is an old fashioned 32.

Detective Russo and Philadelphia police met at the stream to search for the weapon with which it is contended Weiss was murdered within the confines of Bucks County. The finding of the gun so close to the Philadelphia county line will in no way change the jurisdiction of Bucks County authorities, it is said, as it is certain the crime was committed in Bucks County and then the gun tossed into the creek at the point where it was found, later.

The gun was partly buried in the muddy creek and it is alleged that it was tossed there by Frank Wiley.

Authorities have been prevented from previously searching for the gun due to the creek being frozen. Monday the ice began to break away and the water recede. Yesterday the condition of the stream was checked and it was thought advisable to search for the weapon. Dugan and Singer equipped with boots were the first to get into the water. It is probable that the creek will be searched again today in an effort to locate the missing cylinder of the revolver.

Then promptly forgetting that it was a holiday this same man went to Philadelphia where he had business to transact with one of the largest banks in that city.

Upon his arrival there he was surprised to find that the bank was closed, because of Lincoln's birthday.

Jury Gets Hauptmann Case

By James L. Kilgallen
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

Court Room, Flemington, N. J., Feb. 13.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's case passed into the hands of the jury at 11:14 a. m. today and seven minutes later eight men and four women who will return a verdict in the "trial of the century" were led from the court room to begin deliberations.

The jury was given the case immediately after Justice Thomas W. Trenchard had completed his instructions which lasted one hour and eight minutes.

In the jury's ears as they left the Court room was the gray-haired Jurist's charge that they render one of two verdicts:

1. Guilty of murder in the first degree.
2. Acquittal.

Justice Trenchard told the jurors that in the event they found Hauptmann guilty of murder and wished to sentence him to life imprisonment at hard labor, they must incorporate that sentence in their verdict, for, Justice Trenchard explained, the penalty for murder in the first degree, in the State of New Jersey, is death in the electric chair, unless the jury specifically recommends life imprisonment.

Justice Trenchard charged the jury that in order to find Hauptmann guilty of murder they must find him guilty of burglary on the night of March 1st, 1932, when the baby was kidnapped.

"To find the defendant guilty of murder in this case, the jury must find him guilty of burglary. The jury must be convinced that the window in the baby's nursery was closed and that this defendant did feloniously and wilfully open that window," said the Judge.

FINALE FOR SUCH AIRCRAFT

Washington, D. C., Feb. 13.—Asserting the curtain has been rung down on lighter-than-air craft in the Navy, Representative Carl Vinson, Democrat of Georgia, chairman of the House Naval Affairs Committee, today announced his intentions of abandoning the bill appropriating $5,000,000 for new dirigible construction. The disaster that overtook the Macon, and the loss of the Shenandoah and the Akron has convinced the Naval Committee the time has come to abandon experimentation with this type of craft. Both the Akron, which fell into the Atlantic Ocean during a storm, and the Macon, were "as well built as was humanly possible."

The investigation of the Macon crash will be done by his committee as soon as possible. The inquiry will await action of the Naval Board.

Commander Wiley, skipper of the Macon, and other officers will be called here to testify.

"The average number taken care of in any one week was 4096 for Montgomery County and 1338 for Bucks County, making a total of 5434 in any one week."

Continuing the report reads: "In Montgomery County the average number of families per week under care in the different districts were:

"In Bucks County, in the upper end of the county with the District Office in Doylestown, an average of 494 per week were taken care of and in the lower end of the county, with the District Office in Langhorne, an average of 544 were cared for.

BETTER HOUSING CAMPAIGN OPENS IN COUNTY MONDAY

Plan is To Seek Needed Work For Men Now Idle

TO AID RECOVERY

Part of Nation-Wide Scheme Fostered By The Administration

Monday marks the beginning of the Bucks County Better Housing Campaign fostered by the Federal Housing Administration. The program is expected to set thousands of the county's idle dollars and many idle men to work, while aiding recovery in the vast field of building trades and industries.

"The purpose of this program," explains Chairman Horace J. Palmer, "is to encourage widespread repairing and modernizing of residential and commercial properties. It is a part of the nation-wide better housing program which is being conducted under the provisions of Title I of the National Housing Act, recently passed by Congress and put into operation by the Federal Housing Administration."

"Monday, a large group of LWD workers, under the direction of J. Arthur Rosenberger, field campaign manager, will begin calling on property owners throughout the county to distribute a booklet showing how homes and other properties can be modernized to best advantage and to explain how loans for this work can be obtained under the liberal terms made possible under the National Housing Act."

"Loans for property improvements will be available through local commercial, industrial and savings banks, trust companies, and other financial institutions authorized by the administration. The government will not make loans to individuals or corporations for the improvement of their property, but will insure the lending agencies against losses, provided the total of such losses does not exceed 20% of the total volume of credits advanced."

"Collateral will not be required for these loans," Mr. Palmer continued, "except in such cases in which the state law requires the institution to take security. This is true of some building and loan associations and savings banks, but the great bulk of the loans to be made under this plan will be in the form of 'Character loans,' whereby the borrower will receive his loan solely on the basis of his reputation and ability to pay. Endorsers and co-makers will not be necessary."

"It must be understood that while the Bucks County Better Housing Committee is very anxious to receive the heartiest co-operation from property owners and others, no pressure will be brought on property owners to borrow in order that this movement may achieve success. The sole purpose of the campaign is to offer practical co-operation in making it possible or, at least, more convenient, for the property owners to secure necessary funds to remedy run-down conditions or to make their properties more efficient, comfortable, and valuable through modernization."

"It is hoped that the owners of commercial and industrial properties, as well as home owners, will realize the advantage of keeping their property in repair, and take part in the campaign. Community and neighborhood projects of all types will also benefit from taking an interest in the campaign."

"Many corporations and individuals," Mr. Palmer continued, "are, of course, in a position to repair and improve without borrowing. We are just as anxious to have them show the same interest in the program as those who will be directly benefited."

"It is estimated that there are now in the United States some 16,500,000 buildings in need of repairs," concluded Mr. Palmer. "Structural troubles are present in about 3,000,000 of these. The potentialities inherent to the Bucks County Better Housing Campaign, therefore, are extensive; and they are expected to prove a constructive aid in the present recovery effort, as well as of lasting benefit both economically and socially."

CONTROLLING FLOODS

As reports from the flooded area of the Lower Mississippi Valley continue to show conditions of large loss of life and property and widespread suffering, the question whether floods can be controlled once more attains an uppermost position.

If floods can be controlled, now would seem to be the time to prove it. The government is undertaking a huge program of work relief. Flood control along the Lower Mississippi has been proposed for a place in this program. The proposal doubtless will be approved. But how will it be carried out? The government has been spending money for generations to keep the Father of Waters within bounds. Under Mr. Hoover's Administration a comprehensive program of spillways and other engineering devices to care for flood waters was undertaken. But this year's flood again has spread death and destruction.

One feels all the more strongly that flood control is a proper objective for a work relief administration to seek because, if attained, its usefulness could not be questioned. Much work of no usefulness or at least of doubtful usefulness has been carried on under direct relief programs, first the CWA and then the FERA. This is not said so much in criticism as in the hope that the work relief expenditures will be more wisely made. For the administration to have avoided faults, even grievous faults, in the beginning of its venture at caring for the unemployed, would have been for the administration to achieve the impossible.

If the discipline of, say, the CCC camps were applied to work on flood control, doubtless flood control as well as the work relief program would get somewhere.

TAX ON BEAUTY

If the beauty of a woman's face once launched a thousand ships, what will a tax on facials, permanents and other aids to what every woman seeks, launch?

Doubtless the city fathers of New York think they know the answer. Otherwise, one must assume, they would not have ventured into the open with a program of new license fees, one of which is to apply to beauty parlors. A deficit that runs into major figures in a municipality's budget is, needless to say, a frightsome thing. City fathers even on gay Broadway may well shun it. But to tax beauty as one step toward removing it. Can anything justify them in doing that?

Only a year ago the New York stock exchange, in protest against proposed taxes, threatened to move across the river to Newark, or even to expatriate itself and go into residence in Montreal. What if the beauty shops should launch a similar threat. Are the city fathers of New York City prepared for a demonstration by the customers of the hairdressers and cosmetologists?

This affair, it may be said, of course, is New York City's. Outsiders perhaps should hold their peace. But imagine what a former mayor, the man who used to put on a peacock coat when he set out to adorn Broadway, would say to a plan to tax the industry that makes beautiful women more beautiful.

Italy's Jobless Build World's Finest High-Speed Roads

This country's system of roads from a purgatory to a paradise for motorists. They total only 300 miles long but each one is perfection in its own way and each leads through scenery which induces swarms of foreigners to bring their cars just for the ride from Milan to the Lake District, Milan to Bergamo, Bergamo to Brescia, Padua to Mestre, Florence to the sea, Naples to Pompei, Pompei to Salerno, or Turin to Milan.

There are no cross-roads. There is no speed limit. Tracks are one-way.

On these speedways a special toll is charged based on the size of the car. From this toll the private companies expect to earn back their own investment, two-thirds of the cost, and a profit. After fifty years the State, which contributed one-third of the cost, will take possession of the roads without compensation.

That is a special bit of financing. The financing of the State roads and the country roads is another matter. So far the State Road Board has spent around four billion lire, which at the old parity to the dollar would be around $200,000,000. About one-third of the money comes from taxes on motorists, about one-third from the budget, and about one-third from bonds. The average expenditure is between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 gold a year.

Jobs For 100,000

For this comparatively moderate sum the State has kept an average of 100,000 men at work, paying them the wage, large for Italy, of 12 lire a working day. To stretch the work, however, they are employed an average of only half the time, and since they receive no dole for the days they do not work, their real income is about six lire a day. Were they on the dole they would receive about four lire a day.

Thus the actual extra expenditure of the State for the labor that has gone into its roads is only two lire a day. For the 100,000 men this would work out to about $2,700,000 a year. Mussolini considers this a profitable investment. The 100,000 otherwise jobless men like it. The numerous industries which supply the road materials and machines approve of it. Italian motorists are most enthusiastic.

Since Mussolini's road building program began motor traffic in Italy has doubled, despite depression. There are still not quite half a million motor vehicles in Italy but the number is growing out of proportion to other industrial branches during the depression.

Hitler Follows Lead

Today the program has just gotten well under way. If the depression does not cease too soon, if the road workmen are not lured away by better jobs, and if Mussolini does not change his mind Italy will come out of the trials of this decade with a still more magnificent national memorial to the world-crisis.

Already the success of his plan has impressed Mussolini's neighbors. His chief pupil in Europe, Adolf Hitler, has set out to surpass the Italian model. What Germany is doing to get a profit out of the depression is another example of interest to motorists, statesmen and jobless in the world for 1935.

Another article by Mr. Knickerbocker, on German highway betterment and how it is being carried out, will appear in an early issue.

Fifteen Hundred On Relief In The County

$125,798.15, and in Bucks County $28,678.58, a total of $154,476.73.

"Medical care was given to families on Work Relief as well as to families on Direct Relief."

"The State Emergency Relief Board during January began giving orders for clothing to these families, in addition to food, milk, fuel and a small amount toward their rent. Clothing amounts are worked out on a budget scale according to the size of the family and are sent weekly."

"The number of families under care in Montgomery County at the end of January this year is 490 more than at the end of January last year—4013 this year and 3523 last year—an increase of 14 per cent. This is 9 per cent, less than the number of families being given assistance at the time the load was the greatest in March 1933."

"Because of the long continued period of unemployment it has been necessary to give more forms of relief during the past year. Clothing has been given in great quantity. Payment for shelter has been added and in certain instances payment of gas bills."

"At the end of January there were 3500 families receiving relief in Montgomery County and 1997 in Bucks County. In addition there were 1676 persons on Work Relief from relief families in Montgomery County and 550 in Bucks County, making a total of 4597 getting Direct Relief and 2226 Work Relief, or a grand total of 6823.

"Emergency Relief in Bucks County has come under the newly created Area No. 16 only since January 7th, 1935. In the upper end of Bucks County there were 442 families getting relief and in the lower end of the County 754 families."

"The work in the upper end is in charge of Miss Miriam Van Fossen, District Supervisor. The offices are now at 29 E. Court Street, Doylestown, with office hours from 9 a. m. to 12 noon daily. At the present office hours are also held in the Quakertown Fire House, Quakertown, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m."

"The work in the lower end is in charge of Miss Martha Young, with offices at 117 W. Maple street, Langhorne. Their office hours are from 2 to 4 p. m. daily. Office hours are also held in the following places: Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 1 to 5 p. m. in the Municipal Building, Bristol; Tuesday from 11 to 3 p. m. in the Cornwells Fire House, Cornwells, and Monday from 1 to 5 p. m. in the Crodon Fire House, Crodon."

"Many new requests for relief are being received. These are being taken care of as promptly as possible. It seems necessary to visit every family before relief is granted, except in cases of extreme emergency."

"As usual every effort is being made to give relief to those families, and only those, who need it; to give it promptly and to give it adequately."

"Miss Adele Reider is the County Supervisor, with her headquarters at Langhorne. She expects within the next week or two to complete her plans so that all applications for relief can be taken care of at least within 48 hours of the time they apply."

"THE LADY DANCES" by MARGE STANLEY

CHAPTER XXXI

STUBBORNNESS

"You ready to go?" said Pearly Shene, as Mark and Loring leaned at the bar.

"Just about," answered Mark. "Sort of late to leave today," rumbled the giant, "Taulanga's good distance."

"We'll take it by night," said Mark, wondering if Vanya would actually persist in her obstinacy. She wouldn't, he decided; she was bluffing beyond doubt. "It's cooler that way," he added, to Shene.

"Sometimes not," said the other. "Can't help it. We'll have to do it; the packet leaves Taulanga early tomorrow."

Shene gave only a hoarse rumbling by way of reply.

"And while I think of it," said Mark, "I want you to credit my friend Loring with a quart bottle. I'll pay for it now."

"Sure," said Shene. "He'll get it whenever he wants it."

"I think I will!" said Loring, disregarding the glare of Shene's unfriendly eyes.

"Want a receipt?" asked Mark. "What good is a receipt from him?" queried the beachcomber, utterly careless of the fact that Shene was glowering at him. "It would have about as much value as an indenture from Hong there, and that's worth, to be very exact, nothing!"

Shene gave a faint but ominous rumble. He moved away down the length of the bar, and engaged Hong in a low-voiced discussion of some sort. Mark caught the murmured sound of a word or two; it sounded like "last chance."

"You're simply laying the foundation for future trouble," he muttered to Loring. "Why don't you try being a little tactful?"

"You can't use tact with pigs," said the beachcomber casually.

Mark set his glass on the bar. "I've got a number of things to attend to," he said, moving away. "I'll see you before I leave."

He ascended the stairway. Vanya's door was closed, but he heard her moving about within the chamber; he knocked gently on the panel.

The door opened, and he stepped in. Vanya was wearing her flowered robe and tiny leather moccasins; she had apparently been combing her hair, for it cascaded in glistening ebony streams about her shoulders. She looked at Mark with that serious questioning glance he had come to know so well.

"Has the grand jury reported?" he asked, smiling at her.

"Yes, Mark," she said, still with the grave eyes fixed on him. "And did they reverse the decision?"

he continued, covering his growing concern by the use of banter. "No. It confirmed it."

"Honey!" Mark exclaimed. "You can't be meaning to carry this farce any further!"

"It isn't a farce, Mark. It's a comedy or a tragedy—but not a farce." She sank on the bed. "Which one it is depends on where you sit, I suppose."

"I know which it is to me!"

"And to me," added the girl. "But your friend Loring would laugh his shrivelled soul away at it!"

"Vanya, you're being a stubborn fool!"

"I don't know, Mark. Perhaps I am."

"The truth's here. We ought to be leaving right now."

"And yet we're not leaving. Not now nor ever, Mark."

Mark paced back and forth in the limited space of the room. He was brought finally face to face with Vanya's decision, and he realized at last how desperately he wanted her to go with him. Yet it seemed incredible that she should refuse, should prefer this sordid sailor's hangout to the possibilities, the opportunities, that America could offer. He turned suddenly to her, resolved on a new method of attacking her opposition. He seated himself beside her, taking one tiny hand in his. He lifted it in his own great palm, and held it close as if studying it.

"Vanya, dear," he said. "Have you changed so much in your feelings toward me? Have I done or said anything so unforgivable that my offer, which once was acceptable to you, has suddenly become so distasteful that you can't even consider it?"

The girl looked at him with something of the old sullen look returning to her face. A certain sweetness that had grown there of late was dying. She made no answer.

"Dear," said Mark softly, "won't you answer me? At least I deserve to hear your reasons for this abrupt reversal."

"I've given you my reason," said Vanya dully. "Don't make me repeat it. You can't give it, and I shan't demean myself to ask."

"Vanya, dear," he murmured, "did you mean what you said that day, the day we walked together?"

"That I loved you? Mark, you know I mean it. I say it again, Mark—I love you. Of that at least I'm not ashamed."

"Yet you won't go?"

"And yet I won't go, dear."

Mark sat silently thoughtful for a long moment. Vanya reached out her free hand, touching very lightly the unruly brown curls of his head.

"Vanya," he said finally, "if I thought that any fear of me were moving you, if I believed that a repugnance to my caresses were the thing that troubled you, I'd promise gladly to bring you into America without a single advance on my part. I'd take you there without obligation, and ask absolutely nothing of you."

"Mark! Oh, Mark!" she cried. "I know that. I never doubted that. If I'd wanted that, I'd have asked. But it doesn't solve the difficulty—not in the least. I couldn't accept charity—from you least of all people in the world."

"Marriage again!" thought Mark ruefully. "The one thing I'm forbidden to do by everything in which I believe." But aloud he said, "I knew you'd refuse. Yet the offer stands."

"But it doesn't solve anything, dear."

"No," said Mark slowly. "It doesn't."

He pressed the girl closer to him, taking her lovely, troubled face between his hands. He leaned down and kissed her, gently at first, and then with increasing ardor as she closed her dark eyes and yielded in his arms. When finally he withdrew his lips, she lay quiescent against him for awhile, her breath sounding in little gasps.

"Vanya," he breathed, "will you go to America with me?"

"Mark, dear!" she whispered. "Will you go?"

She sat suddenly erect, leaning away from him.

"Mark! Even your kisses are lies, planned for effect. But they can't make me alter this decision. No matter how quickly I forget while I'm in your arms, I'll always remember the moment I'm free of you. I'll remember and repeat what I've said—Mark, I can't go!"

Mark was nearing the point of exasperation. His quick temper rose in him; he fought it back with a surge of effort.

"Vanya," he said, "if this is a trick of yours, an attempt to force my hand, or a method of getting a better bargain, don't drive me too far to recall."

"A trick?" queried the girl. "Do you think I don't mean it?"

"I don't know, but if you don't mean it, you'd better retract it now."

"Well, I don't retract it. You'll see whether I mean it!"

"Vanya," said Mark, "I'm going to my room before this—this insane defiance of yours drives my anger beyond control. I'm going to pack what's left of my things, and then I'm coming back to you. And I want to see your belongings packed too."

He turned abruptly and strode out of the door. A flicker of anger caught his attention, and he saw the massive face of Hong disappearing below the floor level.

"Eavesdropping," he thought fiercely. "To the devil with him!" He strode angrily back to his own room, and thrust the door savagely open, kicking his littered bags aside.

He sat angrily on the bed, wondering what was to be done now. What if Vanya remained firm in her decision? After all this long search, all his restlessness, his dreams of her,

"I'll have to out-bluff her now," he thought. "Is this Talbot stubbornness or really the ideals and moralities of my people? Damned if I know!"

He rose, and began flinging his possessions into his bags. The room looked odd and bare when he finished; it had been home for so long. Then he strode to Vanya's room, knocked and entered, to find her still seated on the bed as if she hadn't moved.

"You're not packed!" he snapped. "Does this mean you're persisting in your obstinacy?"

She nodded gravely, silently. "Very well! I'm leaving," he paused for her reply; none came.

"Listen, Vanya," he continued. "I'll give you one final chance. I'll wait just a half-hour on the beach. Understand? Half an hour!"

He turned away, moving toward the door.

"Mark," said Vanya. "Mark, your key. Take it."

The key of the white house in Spring Brook.

"Keep the damned thing!" grated Mark.

"No." She sprang to the door, tore the key from the ancient lock, and thrust it into Mark's hand. He saw tears on her cheeks. "I don't want a key! I'll not need a key to lock my door here—not ever again!"

HALF AN HOUR

Vanya remained staring at the door as it closed behind Mark. She was scarcely aware that tears were on her cheeks, that her hands were clenched in determined little fists, that her mouth was set in a tight line of desperate intent. She was miserably distraught, despondent over Mark's apparently heartless treatment; he had so completely failed to comprehend her feelings.

"He doesn't care for me," she told herself. "He's cold, hard, and without any understanding; all I mean to him is a pleasant plaything. I'm not even a human being to him—just a doll—or a pet. I'm an intractable dog that won't jump fast enough to his bidding!"

She threw herself unhappily on her bed, and lay with tear-bright eyes staring at the moldy plaster of the ceiling. The pattern of its cracks and damp spots was graven on her mind from long familiarity. There was the odd blur that reminded her of a spouting whale, and there the one that resembled a horrible caricature of Hong's fleshy profile. Was she to see those unpleasant patterns year after year, in this room, or another like it?

If only Mark had loved her! That and that alone, could have justified her yielding to him, could have made that bargain not only acceptable, but a splendid, joyous thing. She could have taken that and much more from him—if he had loved her. But lacking his love, the bargain was a sordid business arrangement, insufferable, unbearable. Even Shene's Cove was preferable to that.

For on this most vital point Vanya and Mark had completely misunderstood each other's meaning. Mark, bound by the rigorous ethics of his New England training, read only "marriage" in Vanya's demand. He never doubted but that that point alone was the basis of her refusal. And Vanya, loving Mark, and believing his interest in her to be but the merest physical infatuation, was demanding his love; for that only she needed to justify her acceptance of his offer.

To Mark, the bargain lacking marriage, was unholy, and Vanya had condemned herself by her original complaisance. He thought her present refusal the result of his own into some more favorable agreement. But to Vanya the bargain was insufferable only because it lacked Mark's love. They had quarreled over the situation without either comprehending the other!

But the girl, lying on her bed and gazing despondently at the ceiling, knew that the devil was in her. Nothing of Mark's own confusion, nothing of the struggle he was undergoing. She seemed lost, helpless, utterly hopeless. She planned wearily at the cheap watch, standing upright in a case on the washstand beside her. Less than three minutes had passed.

HEATING HINTS

by John Barclay

I WANT to caution you against poking at the fire from above. Agitating the fire bed in this manner mixes the ashes with the live coals and causes the formation of clinkers. And clinkers, you know, choke the fire and prevent the free and complete burning of the coal. They also clog up the grates, making it impossible to properly shake the fire.

Clinkers may also form when some portion of the fuel bed becomes packed, due to the odd size and shape of the lumps of coal at that point. This packing prevents the free passage of air through that part of the fuel bed and clinkers form there. Fortunately, however, clinkers thus formed can be easily disposed of, by gently shaking the grates until the solid masses break up and fall into the ashpit. (20)

FALCONS CLINCH SECOND PLACE HOLD

The Falcons took undisputed possession of second place in the A. O. H. Basketball League last night when they scored a 40-37 triumph over the Eries in the only played game of the night.

The contest was close and interesting from the start. Several times the Falcons seemed to pull away from the Eries only to have the boys of "Nev" McGinley spurt and deadlocked the score.

The winning points of the contest were sunk in by "Lou" Pryor who made a wonderful debut at forward for the winning combination. With the acquisition of Pryor, Captain Marty Fallon seems to have his combination rounded out for the fight with the Roe's Buds for first half honors.

"Nev" McGinley and "Mikey" Downes were the best shooters for the losers with fourteen and sixteen points, respectively. Joe Gallagher was high man for the winners.

EXCITING BOUT BOOKED FOR ARENA TONIGHT

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 13.—An exciting wrestling show is in prospect to-night at the Trenton Arena when Promoter Johnny Ipp will present his weekly wrestling card.

Emil Dusek, ace villain of the local mat, will clash with Andy Rascher, clever and capable collegian in the feature two fall out of three bout, 90-minute time limit.

Rascher's winning streak was rudely interrupted last Wednesday when a new referee, Tom Parsonette, stunned the overflow crowd by counting Andy out, when he had Dusek tied up in the ropes and giving Emil more trouble than any other grappler was able to do this season. It was hard for the fans to understand the referee's move but legally he was correct as Rascher was outside the ropes and failed to come in when the count reached ten. It was a decidedly unpopular decision with the fans with whom Rascher is a prime favorite and innumerable fans asked Ipp to re-match the pair.

The secondary feature brings together two matland's giants, huge Pat McClary, 270-pound Irishman and off-color artist de luxe and Wee Willie Davis, 260-pound Southerner and a mat rowdy of the first water. This encounter is arousing almost as much interest as the main event and is slated one fall to a finish, 45-minute time limit.

Al (Busy) Bisignano, popular Iowa Italian, clashes with Sun Jennings, powerful Indian, and rough-house John Swenski meets Ricardo Santos in the 30-minute matches.

Charlie Rahill with five field goals was the main artillery in the "old men's" attack. Joe Smith had five field goals for the Red and Blue.

On Friday the Cardinal and Gray are hosts to Bensalem in their second contest of the week.

A last-half rally by the Langhorne quintet fell short as the Orange and Black of Fallsington High coasted through to a 23-17 victory in the initial fray of the double-header held on the Bristol High School floor last evening.

Trailing at half time, 13-4, the Red and Blue put a determined bid for triumph but the early lead of their rivals from Fallsington was too large to overtake.

Both of these clubs need some polishing up and the fray was uninteresting from whistle to whistle.

Bill Stien, rangy center, was high man for the winners, with three twif pointers and a lone gift shot.

Jake Stradling, Langhorne pivot man, led his club. Stradling had four double dekers, all of the spectacular variety.

This victory advances the Orange and Black within striking distance of Morrisville High, pace setter in the Lower Bucks County loop. These two teams meet in what promises to be a thrilling ball game on Thursday on the Bulldog court.

Nebraska in National Spotlight

Senator George W. Norris

Nebraska's capitol at Lincoln

Nation-wide interest is being shown in Nebraska's plan for a unicameral legislature. More than 30 states have asked for information on the program adopted by the Cornhuskers and sponsored by Senator George W. Norris, veteran Republican Progressive. Costs of conducting the legislature are expected to be reduced 50 per cent when the two branches are combined in 1937. Nebraska also boasts of no bonded indebtedness. A clause in the state constitution prohibits pledging the state credit more than $100,000. Under Nebraska's pay-as-you-go program, the state financed the new $10,000,000 capitol without a special levy or bond issue.

BEHIND the SCENES in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL
Copyright, 1935,

HOLLYWOOD—Six days from Hollywood to Moscow is the hand-icap Rouben Mamoulian has given himself. One of the few Hollywood folk invited by the U. S. S. R. to visit the Russian motion picture festival starting Feb. 20, he will take a plane for New York when "Becky Sharp" is finished, boat it to Europe and fly to Moscow within 14 hours from leaving the currying.

Rouben Mamoulian

set. He expects to catch the last few days of the festival on this invitation from his native land.

Katharine Hepburn was one of the others invited. King Vidor is another.

One thing that detonates enthusiasm in George Stevens, the R-K-O director, is billiards. Taking an hour off the other day from "Laddie" at his club he was warmed by a win over a pickup billiard partner to follow the suggestion of a note on the wall. "Get acquainted with your fellow members. Patronize their business; they can help yours."

"I'm a director," Stevens introduced himself.

"That's fine," said the stranger, offering his card. "So am I."

One of the minor sagas of sentiment is the case of Jean Meadows, private chauffeur for Marie Dressler during the last three and a half years of her life. Since she died, he has persistently refused to drive for any other actress in Hollywood.

Another day, he took a job at the R-K-O lot as studio policeman at much less than he could earn as one of the colony's top-bracket chauffeurs.

A new social wrinkle is the Hollywood Maid's Night Out Club, founded by the Otto Krugers. The idea is to make mutual visits on Thursday nights for dinner, giving the help a night off and the hosting couple to prepare the meal. They've already exchanged visits with the Ralph Morgans.

One of the stars who eases the woes of studio designers is Claudette Colbert, who herself designed the hospital costumes you'll see her wearing in the Walter Wanger production of "Private Worlds."

Travis Banton, Paramount's style expert believes she has genius for dress designing and has made the suggestion for her to spend a couple of hours a night at it, opening a chain of gown shops.

Claudette, however, is deaf to his suggestion. She says she is earning enough. Incidentally, she turns down twice her yearly income, which runs into six figures, in offers from manufacturers and style folk to use her name.

Add to style notes: Sheep dog cloth. For nine months, Director Edward Griffith, now at work on "M-G-M's" "No More Ladies", has been collecting the combings from the hair of Jeanette MacDonald's English sheep dog, Captain. Jeanette discovered he was saving the currying.

Dudley Murphy's sheep dog, too. Her mystification was cleared up when the other day when Ed appeared in a new coat tailored from cloth that had been woven in Los Angeles from the combings of the two dogs.

Sterilized and cleaned, it makes a smart gray-white sport shade.

The Wesley Ruggles, whose son, Charles Wesley entertained Hollywood's tots at his second birthday party, have been puzzled by one of the little songs he sings. It goes like this:

"Hark! Hark! The dogs do bark. Some are in rags, some are in rags. Some are in rags . . ."

The mystery was cleared up when Arline Judge found a toy phonograph record of the song in his nursery which jumped the needle when it came to the "some are in rags" and kept repeating the phrase. "The youngster had learned it by heart."

LATE FLASHES—Two more troubled by fogs the other night were Elizabeth Allan, whose training in London pea soup mists didn't help her from driving into a ditch, and Jean Parker, who tuned in the booming voice of Lawrence Tibbett on her dashboard radio set when her auto horn went out.

Florence Rice and mother are back from that Arizona jaunt.

Before Bud Eichelberger left for Europe, he kicked a gold bracelet on Rochelle Hudson's wrist and took the key with him. . . . Constance Collier, Mary Pickford, Al Kaufman and a Captain Howard made a four-some at Lucene's the other night. . . . Kay Francis rates the rank of honorary colonel of Hobo Hot Springs, Cal. C. C. C. camp, along with Mae West and Jean Blondell.
